Reflections on Junior High Camp from our WSYG Summer Interns

FROM KENNEDY BARDEN

For people all across the country, the mere mention of summer camp brings to mind emotions, experiences, and relationships that few, if any, other places can replicate. As a camper of many years, I aspired to one day be the mentor and friend to others that my counselors had once been for me. Camp was a major part of my life, and getting to be a part of it again was one of the most spiritually refreshing and fulfilling parts of the summer, as it has been for the hundreds of students over the years at White Station. The theme for this week of camp was Origins, a reflection on the way that God has created us to exist and to be, thus giving us insight into the way that the world will become when all things are made complete. I couldn't have asked for a better theme personally, as the possibility of reflecting on my own camp origins and where I could go from here became all the more visceral to me. I also relished the opportunity to once again learn from one of my dear spiritual mentors in Brent Roe-Hall, whom you will be blessed to hear from this morning in the Fellowship Hall. Junior High Camp will continue its strong legacy of relationship building and spiritual formation as long as the members of White Station continue to provide the mentorship and guidance that have defined camp for years. Thank you for blessing our students, and thank you for blessing me so richly over the summer with that same mentorship. This truly has become my church family. I pray that you remain strong in the Lord and in His mighty power in the many years to come.

FROM ALLISON GUNN

While there are many things that I will take away from my summer at White Station, Junior High Camp was the culmination of growing relationships, challenging myself to step into different roles of leadership and service, and moving further along my spiritual journey. An important step I took at camp was the challenge to rethink my life according to God's original intent for creation. Throughout the week Brent addressed God's intention for the topics of identity, intimacy, work, and rest over the course of the week. Each of the topics spoke to me in a different way, but the one that had the biggest impact for me was the discussion of God's plan for our identities. In Genesis 1, there is this repetition of God looking at creation and calling it good, and this doesn't stop with the creation of humanity, in fact, after the creation of humanity the phrase changes to "very good." This idea of God looking at me and seeing something good challenges me. Too often I root my self-identity in my failures, insecurities, and pain, but that's not how God sees me. Since this lesson, when I have caught myself identifying with my brokenness I am reminded that God sees me and calls me good. This is something that I will continue to grow through as I go on from White Station and into the next phases of my life.
